In quantum mechanics, the Schrödinger equation describes how a system changes with time. It does this by relating changes in the state of system to the energy in the system (given by an operator called the Hamiltonian).Therefore, once the Hamiltonian is known, the time dynamics are in principle known.

At over 4 sigma this is much more compelling than it has ever been, and the best potential sign of new (non-Standard Model) physics. I'm not current on what models people like to explain this result, but it has been factored in (or ignored if you didn't trust it) in particle physics model building and phenomenology for years.
